Short Hospital Stay:

Your son was trying to help mom in the kitchen and was burned. While not severe just to be safe you take him to the ER to get looked at. At the ER there are several people setting around but no hospital employees to be seen. You set your child down in a chair by the door you go to find a nurse. As you turn down a hallway you are confronted by two armed men who are in the process of stealing drugs and needles for less than legal use. You're caught off guard and have your hands up when you hear screams from the ER waiting room. Knowing your son is there alone you have no choice but to draw and fire as the two come towards you. As you retreat across the waiting room you are confronted and must engage two more armed attackers. Your son has already sought cover near the entrance and is ready to head out the door. As you go to leave two more armed thugs are coming in to the ER and are between you and safety. You engage them both from the cover of the doorway. Neither stays down so you are forced to re engage with head shots to end the threat.
